Manila. The University provides students with the opportunity to have one slot in a first come per serve basis.

"The Educational Role in College Student Housing," Riker and DeCoster outlined two basic assumptions underlying efforts to infuse educational elements into college residence halls: (1) environment influences behavior, and (2) learning is a total process. They also presented a framework that identifies five objectives for student housing that range from those focused on the construction and renovation of physical facilities to those fostering the growth and development of students. In this article, we place these ideas within their historical context and reflect on the ways in which they have evolved and influenced the housing profession during the past years.

Learning Is a Total Process That students are considered whole persons, that learning involves a multifaceted process extending beyond the purely intellectual domain, and that in-class and out-of-class learning experiences are mutually enhancing have become foundational assumptions in student affairs in general and campus housing in particular.
